I haven't completely digested Christine's edits but after quick skim, noted she was making some editorial/grammatical edits. Unless we know for sure, she's correct and Tt missed something, I think we should ignore all stylistic/grammatical changes that others suggest and only focus on substantitive things that may need to be adjusted. We should keep all changed in track changes so that Tt (if they do final review, can just focus on sections that changed rather than have to read through entire doc again).

Just my thoughts...

Folks, it's getting there. I took great care in reviewing the decision document because I see it along with the decision letter as the two main pieces that will be used to support our decision and communicate why we're right to come that decision. I did find the roads section to be confusing and repetitive. I felt it needed restructuring to make the argument tighter for what the impacts are and what the changes need to be. Hence, I made quite a few edits there. For ease of your looking at my edits/comments, I am attaching two versions, one with all the track changes and one that's a clean version.

Thanks for the great care you all are taking to make our documents really, really good.
